Change Detection in Synthetic Aperture Radar Images based on Image Fusion and Fuzzy Clustering

It presents an unsupervised distribution-free change detection approach for synthetic aperture radar (SAR) images based on an image fusion strategy and a novel fuzzy clustering algorithm using MATLAB programming. Image change detection is a process that analyzes images of the same scene taken at different times in order to identify changes that may have occurred between the considered acquisition dates. Change detection approach is made up of two main phases: 1) generate the difference image using the wavelet fusion based on the mean-ratio image and the log-ratio image, and 2) automatic analysis of the fused image by using an improved fuzzy clustering algorithm.
